

Each Essentials book offers an engaging and highly personal view of a law school course—a “forest but not the trees” view of the subject—authored by leading teacher/scholars. Each Essentials invites students to share the insights culled from the authors’ years of classroom experience.

Environmental Law: The Essentials, presents:

- An informal writing style, engaging and concise, that illuminates important topics
- Comprehensive topical coverage that mirrors the content of major casebooks and demystifies complex and bewildering statutes
- Cross-referencing that draws connections among shared themes from different chapters

Jonathan Nash is a Professor of Law at Emory University, where he specializes in environmental law and also teaches courses and conducts research in the areas of property law, civil procedure, and the study of courts and judges. Professor Nash is a prolific scholar, publishing in many top-ranked law journals.
