

NOVEMBER 1918

THE GERMAN REVOLUTION

ROBERT GERWARTH

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of Maps	xvii
List of Illustrations	xix
‘Like a beautiful dream’: Introduction	I
1. 1917 and the revolution of expectations	20
2. Hoping for victory	45
3. Endgame	62
4. The sailors’ mutiny	77
5. The revolution spreads	90
6. Showdown in Berlin	106
7. Making peace in the West	122
8. Challenges for the young Republic	130
9. Fighting radicalization	139
10. The triumph of liberalism	160
11. Democracy besieged	173
12. Undermining Weimar	184
Epilogue: The defiant republic: Germany, 1919–1923	212
Notes	223
Picture Acknowledgements	275
Bibliography	277
Index	315

List of Maps

1. Europe, 1914

xxii

2. Europe, 1918

xxiv

List of Illustrations

0.1. Visibly shaken by the revolutionary situation in Germany, Wilhelm II waits with his staff at a station on the Dutch border, on the train journey into exile	2
1.1. President Woodrow Wilson calls for the USA to declare war on Germany in a speech before both Houses of Congress	29
1.2. Lenin is greeted by jubilant supporters on arrival in Petrograd in mid-April 1917	39
2.1. At the end of January 1918 a large number of German iron and steel industry workers followed the calls of their Revolutionary Shop Stewards and went on strike as a protest against the war	50
3.1. The Allies mounted a successful counter-offensive after the collapse of the German Spring Offensive in 1918	67
3.2. The Kaiser appointed the liberal aristocrat Prince Max von Baden as Reich Chancellor on 3 October 1918	69
4.1. The broad public support for the rebellious sailors of the High Seas Fleet was decisive for the success of the revolution	81
4.2. Kiel was both the birthplace and the heart of the revolution in early November 1918	86
5.1. Soldiers celebrate on 8 November in front of the Mathäuser brewery in Munich	95
5.2. Kurt Eisner on the way to a meeting with Friedrich Ebert	96
6.1. Leaflets proved the most effective way of disseminating the latest political news	109
6.2. The sailors of the German High Seas Fleet in Wilhelmshaven celebrated the Kaiser's abdication with a giant fireworks display using their stored munitions	115
6.3. On 9 November 1918, tens of thousands of people gathered on the Königsplatz in front of the Reichstag to witness Philipp Scheidemann proclaim the German Republic from a balcony of the building	119
8.1. One major achievement of the Ebert government was the peaceful and orderly return to Germany of millions of German soldiers	131

8.2. Returning German soldiers and civilians at the Brandenburg Gate in Berlin on 10 December 1918	133
8.3. During the First World War women increasingly stepped in to do jobs that had previously been carried out by men	136
9.1. A poster summarizing the biggest challenges facing the Ebert government in the early months of the Weimar Republic: 'smooth demobilization', 'building the Republic', and 'Peace'	140
9.2. Government snipers in position on the Brandenburg Gate	147
9.3. An anti-Bolshevik poster reflects the widespread fear of Bolshevism spreading westward	150
9.4. Karl Liebknecht, the leader of the far Left of the German revolutionary movement, on his deathbed	157
10.1. The satirical magazine Kladderadatsch refers to the election of 19 January 1919 as 'Ladies' Choice'	163
11.1. The March Battles in Berlin were suppressed with extreme brutality by the government	174
11.2. A 'wanted' poster for the socialist playwright Ernst Toller in the wake of the bloody suppression of the Munich 'Räterepublik'	177
12.1. On 22 May 1919 the National Constituent Assembly authorized the German government to sign the Versailles Treaty	196
12.2. Marie Juchacz, Majority Social Democrat deputy to the National Constituent Assembly, speaks to demonstrators on Berlin's Wilhelmplatz	198